

Auditorium
4.40-5.30pm

Fostering lifelong learning through connecting higher education with work environments

Helen BOUND<sup>1*</sup>, Dilly FUNG<sup>2</sup>, Tony HARLAND<sup>3</sup>, Susanna LEONG<sup>4</sup>
Irene de PATER<sup>5</sup>, Bernard TOH<sup>6</sup>,

<sup>1</sup>Institute for Adult Learning, Singapore

<sup>2</sup>London School of Economics & Political Science, United Kingdom

<sup>3</sup>University of Otago, New Zealand

<sup>4</sup>Office of the Senior Deputy President & Provost, National University of Singapore

<sup>5</sup>School of Business, National University of Singapore

<sup>6</sup>Office of Alumni Relations, National University of Singapore

*helen\_bound@ial.edu.sg

The focus of this Panel will be to address two very topical and important issues in today's higher education landscape, and their implications for NUS: fostering lifelong learning through connecting academic and workplace learning, and connecting students and faculty members with one another and with alumni. The Panel will discuss practical issues exemplified by a set of tensions that can arise when we aim to partner with students, faculty, and alumni in the co-creation of an authentic education. Among these is the relation between traditional undergraduate education and CET (continuing education and training); how learning in the university might connect with workplace learning; and ultimately, what the increasing emphasis on vocational education implies for universities.